Dancing for a king

Performing a belly dance for a Middle Eastern wedding or an "Arabian Nights"-themed corporate event is one thing. Dancing for the pharaoh himself is on a whole other plane.

Margate-based belly dancer Soraya will showcase her craft at the Franklin Institute in Philadelphia tonight in honor of the arrival of the traveling exhibit, "Tutankhamun and the Golden Age of the Pharaohs." Soraya is scheduled to perform two shows for an invitation-only black tie gala.

"This is probably the greatest show I've ever gotten," Soraya said. "It's like I'm opening for King Tut himself. It's really amazing."
